Summary Writing

Luvvie Ajayi Jones is a writer and a person who offers her criticism for change. Change occurs by making ourselves a part of it but there are too few people in the world willing to be the starting point of change. She wanted to become a doctor but ended up writing. It took nine years before she owned the title of a writer. She then realised that fear a major contributor to decisions. When she decided to not make fear her ruler, she noticed a lot of amazing things happening to her. She decided to actively pursue things that scared her, instead of avoiding it. She went on her first solo vacation to the Dominican Republic and had an incredible time. She did not enjoy going in water, so that's what she did next – went to Mexico and swam with dolphins. She also wrote her own book, "I'm Judging You – The Do-Better Manual". In the same year she also did her most feared thing, skydiving. She then realised that comfort is not a good thing, the hard truth is sometimes the best answer. With her core values, honesty, integrity, and justice, she feels that she needs to speak the truth in the world. She believes that disrupting the peace is the best course of action in a room full of people. She speaks for the minority who don't have a chance to voice themselves.
